

Neuro-modulation device maker Cyberonics plans to acquire Italy based Sorin

Image Sources: Company pages and social media

Cyberonics has its product focused on vagus nerve stimulation while Sorin plays in the vascular device segments. Post merger 54% of company stakes would remain with Cyberonics. 2015 has just begun and medtech has already picked its favourite activity for the year ---M&As. With prominent deals including Pfizer-Hospira, 3M- Polypore International(Separations Media Business) and recently talked BSC-Endo International(AMS unit), all serve testimonial to the fact that 2015 will be an year to watch in regards Medtech M&As.

Nikon to water its healthcare roots through Optos acquisition

Image Sources: Company pages and social media

Nikon is often not the name that rings in your head when we think about medical devices. As the company dusts itself from its not so good past and heads towards new strategies of growth and progress, it begins its journey by taking medical device path. It is likely to shell out close to USD 400 Million for Optos on boarding in coming days.

Illumina's incubator gets illuminated by fund infusion

Image Sources: Company pages and social media

In a funding challenged environment, corporate incubators come out as life savers for different start-ups, and medtech start-ups are no different to these situations and case scenarios. Recently kick started Illumina Accelerator Boost Capital gets USD 40 million commitment from VGI.

